

Ashley Archer Doehling (she/her) is the Curriculum Initiative Analyst in the Curriculum Support Office. Originally from Leesburg, Ga, she attended Georgia Southern University and earned a degree in political science with certifications in computer science and graphic design. Ashley then moved to Tallahassee, FL and earned her master's in Higher Education from Florida State University. She is currently pursuing her PhD in Higher Education at Florida State University. Her research interests are related to educational accessibility, integrating socially just curriculum and teaching practices into classrooms, and graduate student success.

As the CSO Curriculum Initiative Analyst, Ashley supports faculty and staff in designing programs that contribute to KSU's curricular portfolio. She helps manage KSU's impressive micro-credentialing program and tracks and reports data associated with curriculum initiatives and correlating student outcome trends. She is excited to support faculty and staff through the development of training materials and resources related to the curriculum process at KSU.

In her free time, Ashley enjoys crafting, playing board games, traveling, language learning, and reading mystery novels.
